

A Little Sermon

On Style.

What is style? you may as well ask what is taste for both queries depend upon one's point of view. One man may like a suit with many radical features; another may be ultraconservative and prefer the most modest cut he can find; yet both may be in good taste so far as the wearer's opinion is concerned. Public opinion as in many other matters is the court of last resort on the subject of style, and her decision always strikes a happy medium between the two extremes. That is the plan which Alfred Benjamin & Co., the famous makers of men's ready-to-service apparel in New York, have followed for thirty years. To avoid extremes, to cut each garment conservatively but correctly according to the most approved custom models. That has been the Benjamin Style System. Experience has proven such a policy wise. Ninety-nine men in a hundred prefer being neat to being conspicuous. Look for quality rather than oddity, all of which brings us to that old truism, "The best dressed man is he whose dress no one observes." All of the Benjamin correct clothes for men are tailored in their own New York workrooms by salaried specialists and bear this famous mark
